VENUS

We start with a simple observation about people in this country. They have accepted the possibility that perhaps within this very century we will make contact with a planet in outer space. That also includes the chance that some sunny morning a spaceship may land upon our soil with either Martians, Venutians, or Moon Men. Scientists have been working on plans for a "practical" spaceship that will leave earth, carry human beings as passengers, and land upon some planet.

Constantly we are being forced to revise our knowledge about what had been previously accepted as "facts" in regard to outer space. The ultimate test will come when the first Earthling steps out of his spaceship and utters those famous words: "I wouldn't have believed it!"

At one time it was thought that the temperature of Venus in its cloud stratosphere was 122 degrees F. It had been surmised that the surface of the planet was much hotter. Those conclusions were arrived at by means of optical observations. The Naval Research Laboratory announced recently that its radio astronomers had discovered that Venus gives off a continuous radio signal. The signal is evidence that the planet has a temperature higher than boiling water, and water boils at 212 degrees F. Cornell H. Mayer, one of a team of three radio astronomers said that Venus was the first planet to have a continuous radio wave caused by thermal energy.

The emanations from Venus manifested in the radio telescope as a continuous hissing, are on the high radio frequency of 10,000 megacycles. The discovery was made possible by the use of a sensitive instrument called a radiometer that is capable of detecting very small "radio powers." It was used with the Naval Research Laboratory's fifty-foot radio telescope. The radio telescope with its large parabolic antenna and radiometer made it possible to penetrate the cloud that perpetually veils Venus.

Nobody has seen the face of this planet. The brilliant object in the sky is merely the reflection of light from the cloud blanket. Radio waves may be generated by planets either by heat or by electrical disturbances in the atmosphere. The temperature can be calculated from the wave length of the radio waves if they are heat generated. In the case of Venus, the wave length is three centimeters or 1.2 inches from crest to crest. This corresponds to a temperature of more than 212 degrees F.

So all this gives us at present one simple fact: It is rather hot on the planet Venus. After this fact, you can start to try to come to some conclusions. Actually you want the answer to the sixty-four dollar question: Is there life on the planet Venus? If Venus is so hot, then it is because of the great amount of carbon dioxide that its atmosphere contains. The carbon dioxide is a sort of blanket that checks radiation. If there is any water on Venus, it probably is in the form of steam.

A temperature which is higher than that of boiling water would seem to argue against the possibility of there being life on the planet Venus. Add to all this the fact that the amount of oxygen in the atmosphere is so small it can hardly support life as we know it. As we continuously improve the radio telescope, we shall learn more and more about outer space. The largest one in the United States at present is at the Harvard University Observatory.

It has a bowl-shaped antenna, or "ear" similar to the familiar radar antenna. The "ear" is sixty feet in diameter. The antenna is mounted on a fifty foot tower and can be focused to watch any part of the sky. It weighs 8,000 pounds. It is expected to reveal details of the great spirals of the Milky Way, which is a flat cloud of stars containing the solar system. The sun and its planets are only a tiny part of the Milky Way.

The telescope also is expected to reveal more about lightless clouds of hydrogen. They are so large that it would take twenty-five years for light to pass from one end to the other of such clouds. And light travels at the speed of 186,000 miles per second. On the average, these clouds of hydrogen gas contain fifty to one hundred times as much material as our sun.

The radio telescope is also expected to yield more knowledge about invisible "radio stars." These are associated with gas masses in violent motion. Their existence was not known before radio was used in astronomy. Which also raises a very important factor to be considered: That as we do invent new devices, we must be prepared to find new facts and also to correct errors.

Some of the distant hydrogen clouds are traveling through space so quickly that their radio frequencies are different from the hydrogen clouds nearer the earth.

The antenna can trap signals as weak as one billionth of a watt in its dish. Focussing such signals in a central horn, it turns them into electrical energy and then amplifies the signals just as a radio set amplifies signals from a broadcasting station. A visual record is made by a pen moving across a sheet of paper. At present this radio telescope will operate with precision in winds up to twenty-five miles an hour. Precision diminishes gradually up to forty-five miles an hour. Winds above this limit cause vibrations that prevent useable readings.

It might as well be mentioned that radio and television signals that once supposedly stopped at the horizon are regularly being transmitted around the curvature of the earth.

By beaming sufficiently powerful transmissions into the sky, engineers have found that enough signal strength gets scattered back to the earth to provide an "extremely reliable" means of communication. The new mode of transmission, known as "scatter propagation" is virtually immune to the atmospheric interruptions that often cripple international communications. Six years ago all this was largely a blackboard theory. Its fundamental principle can be likened to the ray of a searchlight. When the beam of the searchlight is pointed toward the sky, its light can be seen from behind a hill. The searchlight's lens need not be in view to provide the scattered reflection. It is the scattered reflection of radio signals with which the engineers have further mastered the problem of the horizon.

One question that many people ask me is the following: "When the first spaceship leaves earth for some outer space destination, will it be possible for us here on earth to follow it?" I assume that most people would be content to watch the spaceship bound for Venus as it makes its trip. However, there may be those who would want a detailed description of what goes on in the first spaceship.

It is no longer a military secret that we can set up television cameras on a battlefield and watch what is happening. This enables the general staff to get a complete view at the same time of what is happening. They can see how the tanks are fighting the enemy tanks; how our planes are driving back the invader; and how our foot soldiers are advancing. We could probably do the same when the spaceship bound for Venus leaves Earthport.

Inside the spaceship would be a commentator with his camera. He would interview the different members of the crew. Probably would ask all kinds of questions: "Describe for the people back home the sensation you have as you walk towards me... Is it strange? Do you want to send a message to your little daughter?" We would all be at home watching this on our television screens. The assumption is that television experts will have perfected a unit capable of doing all this. In addition there may be cameras mounted outside the spaceship. We will be switched from one camera to another. There will be a dramatic moment as we all watch three brave men making repairs on the outer hull of the ship. We will all be scared as we hear a meteor is in the path of the ship. But all is well.

The real dramatic moment arises as the spaceship approaches Venus. What is behind that cloud? Will the crew from earth find any Venutians? Will our people be able to withstand the heat? We know they have heat resistant clothing over their regular space suits. The ship is preparing for a landing. All we see is a vast cloud of steam. The reverse rockets go into action. Now we are all tense. Even junior has his eyes fixed on the screen. All over earth there is a stillness. You could really drop a pin and hear its noise.

Suddenly we see the face of the brave leader of this expedition. The man who spent thirty years of his life designing and redesigning that spaceship. He begins to speak. What does he say? He utters those famous words: "I wouldn't have believed it!"

Mysteries of UNEXPLORED WORLDS

The STRANGE GUESTS OF TSARUS

IN THE UNENDING SEARCH FOR KNOWLEDGE OF THE UNIVERSE AROUND US, THE SCIENTISTS OF ALL THE KNOWN WORLDS WERE PUZZLED BY A SMALL PLANET OUT PAST SATURN. INTREPID EXPLORERS WENT THERE... AND REPORTED FINDING CIVILIZATION, FRIENDLY BEINGS. OTHERS WHO FOLLOWED CONFIRMED IT. YET, DR. KYLE DURAN, WRITING A TEXTBOOK ON THE NEW NEIGHBOR FOUND ONE THING PUZZLING...

LOOK, KYLE! IT'S HORRIBLE!

NOW I KNOW WHY YOU NEVER CAME BACK TO EARTH, LATIMER! YOU COULDN'T!

CALM DOWN, DURAN! YOU WON'T MIND THIS AFTER WE PROCESS YOU!

S1509

MONTHS BEFORE, DR. DURAN BEGAN HIS BOOK... USING ALL THE DATA TRANSMITTED BY THE EXPLORERS ALREADY ON TSARUS...

YOUR PARAGRAPH ABOUT THE TSARIAN ATMOSPHERE ISN'T CLEAR, KYLE.

I KNOW--I'LL HAVE TO GET MORE INFORMATION FROM LATIMER!

HI, DOCTOR-- HOW'S THE BOOK COMING?

SLOWLY, MAJOR! I NEED MORE DOPE ON THE TSARIAN ATMOSPHERE! IT MUST HAVE AN OXYGEN BASE--YOU AND THE OTHERS DON'T WEAR SPACE SUITS!

Mysteries of UNEXPLORED WORLDS

OF COURSE, DOCTOR! CLIMATE'S WONDERFUL TOO-- STAYS AROUND EIGHTY ALL THE TIME! TOO BAD YOU FELLOWS THERE CAN'T JOIN, US YET, THE SPACE PORT WILL BE FINISHED ONE OF THESE DAYS, THOUGH!

ONE MONTH DRAGGED BY, THEN ANOTHER, AND DR. DURAN WAS GETTING IMPATIENT, HE WANTED FIRST HAND INFORMATION, NOT LATIMER'S REPORTS...

FOR THE LAST TIME, DURAN, NO! I'LL SEND HUNDREDS OF YOU FELLOWS THERE WHEN LATIMER SAYS THE SPACE PORT THERE IS READY!

DON'T DO THAT, SIR! LET ME GO ALONE FIRST! THERE'S... THERE'S SOMETHING WRONG UP THERE, SOMETHING LATIMER HASN'T TOLD US ABOUT!

YES DR. DURAN SENSED SOMETHING WRONG--AND HE WAS RIGHT...

WHAT IS IT, URSK?

YOUR FRIEND, DURAN, HAS LEFT EARTH! HE DEPARTED FORTY HOURS AGO.

DR. DURAN, A POOR SPACE PILOT AT BEST, HAD TIRED OF WAITING... BUT VERNA, HIS ASSISTANT, HAD BEEN FULLY TRAINED IN SPACE FIGHT...

BUT WHY DO YOU THINK LATIMER IS IN TROUBLE?

BECAUSE HE'S FOUND ONE REASON AFTER ANOTHER TO KEEP US FROM JOINING HIM! I DON'T THINK TSARIUS CAN SUPPORT LIFE--OUR KIND OF LIFE, THAT IS!

BUT LATIMER, HE'S...

...CHANGED, VERNA! WHEN WE SPOKE, DID YOU NOTICE THAT HE NEVER BREATHED? OR SNEEZED? OR SNIFFLED?

Mysteries of UNEXPLORED WORLDS

Mysteries of UNEXPLORED WORLDS

MAJOR LATIMER HAD ALREADY PREPARED A ROOM AND A MEAL FOR THE NEWLY ARRIVED PAIR. HE AND URSK, THE RULING TSARIAN SCIENTIST JOINED THEM...

Mysteries of UNEXPLORED WORLDS

Mysteries of UNEXPLORED WORLDS

THEY'RE COMING TO LIFE! THERE MUST BE EMERGENCY GENERATORS, GET ABOARD AND START THE ROCKETS, I'LL CLOSE THE HATCH!

URSK COMMANDS YOU TO...

TELL URSK TO WRITE ME ABOUT IT, ADDRESS IT TO EARTH!

SECONDS LATER, THE POWERFUL ROCKETS CUT IN -- JUST IN TIME...

YOU SEEM GLAD THEY ESCAPED, I ERRORED IN NOT REMOVING THE BRAIN AREA CONTROLLING SENTIMENT!

YOU LEFT ME LITTLE ENOUGH, URSK! YES, I'M GLAD THEY'RE GOING BACK! IT'S TOO LATE FOR ME -- BUT I'LL SEE THAT MY FATE DOESN'T BE -- FALL ANY OTHERS FROM MY PLANET!

WELL, YOU'RE FREE, BOTH OF YOU! YOU KNOW, OF COURSE, THAT I WILL NEVER AGE OR GROW OLD! YOU MISSED THAT CHANCE!

WE KNOW THAT, MAJOR -- BUT WE HAVE OTHER COMPENSATIONS!

YES, I KNOW, DOCTOR -- AND I WISH YOU BOTH GREAT HAPPINESS, THE KIND I CAN NEVER KNOW!

END
